Why watching movies in English?

Watching movies in English can improve a wide number of skills: the first benefit watching films can have on the way you speak English can be to get you accustomed to the natural flow and sounds of the language.

Even if you are not very good at English and the fast dialogue and use of slang in movies can make the task seem intimidating, by the end of a movie you will certainly know a few extra words, understand some words you knew better, and have a new perspective on how a conversation with native speakers would go.

If you are a fan of movies, you will notice that they are much better in the original. Watching a dubbed film will never be as good as watching the original version. Why? Because in the original version, the actors' voices are real. Everything is just like the director imagined. Learning English by watching movies is learning by input. the learning process is similar. First you get a lot of correct English sentences into your head, Then you imitate them and you can make your own sentences. And isn't that why you are learning English - to be able to make your own sentences ? That is why watching movies (just like reading books) is such a great way to learn English.
